My new house has these small black birds in it. They were there when we moved in, but we have not seen them since. When I did notice them, they would fly around the house and land on the air vent next to the heating vent. I'm not sure if they even like to be there, but they don't seem to get attacked or anything. Just curious what they are? A: I think this is a bobwhite quail. Bobwhites have smaller, browner, and more rounded tail feathers than turkeys, which they resemble. Myocardial infarction is a frequent complication of acute mesenteric ischaemia. It can be produced by two different mechanisms: occlusion of the arterial origin of the celiac trunk with anterograde thromboembolism or occlusion of the celiac trunk by the kink of the superior mesenteric artery. The latter mechanism is usually an incidental finding, but it can also be associated with the acute occlusion of the superior mesenteric artery. In these cases of major mesenteric ischaemia, death by myocardial infarction occurs about 10 days after the onset of the mesenteric ischaemia and is usually preceded by the acute occlusion of the superior mesenteric artery. This can be the cause of a "telescoping" syndrome of the pancreas, intestinal ischaemia and retroperitoneal haemorrhage.Q: How
