Of course, "The Chevy Chase Show" was one of the few bright spots of his career. In the 1969-70 TV season, the Emmy-winning show about a TV comedy variety show began, but would only continue for one season. The show eventually became a cult classic, with Chase's character, a middle-aged TV producer named Perry Lafferty, often engaging in surreal, often rambling conversations with guests like Jerry Lewis and Groucho Marx. In the interview pictured above, Chase discusses "The Chevy Chase Show," saying, "I think that when you produce something, you have some obligation. I mean, it is your job. I think you have an obligation to do something. I mean, it's not like you're not gonna be a guy who's gonna have kids. You're gonna have a career and kids have a career. You know, you can't be on the mountain top and have kids. You have to be around the mountain. You gotta get down there. I would make that commitment if I were you, because it is a commitment. You don't make a commitment like that unless you're gonna be on the mountain top." According to a source close to the comedian, Chase suffered from dementia and reportedly didn't know who he was when he died. "He was lost, he didn't know where he was, and it wasn't until last week he started to get out of the woods. He had a major breakdown," the source told the New York Post. "He was a smart guy and knew who he was, but he was lost, in and out. He had Alzheimer's." Q: Finding the speed of an object that is shooting out from the bottom of the screen I'm trying to solve the following question on an online coding contest: A cylindrical elevator takes 15
