1. Provides a context menu item on explorer's context menu to easily copy/move files, folders to another location. 2. Automatically changes file time stamps. 3. Automatically sets file attributes (read/write/hidden/system/compressed). 4. Automatically sets source path of selected filenames. My question is: Is there any way to insert this menu item when a file is selected and when double-clicking on the selected file? I'm using Windows Vista Business. Sincerely, DaKhnguyen NOTE: Sorry for my bad English. P.S.: If there are any Java programmers that can help me to write it in Java, it would be much appreciated! Do you really need to do all of this for every single file or would it be enough to do this when the user selects a directory or a single file? Of course, as there are more than 1 file. I'd like to avoid copying it one by one. Thanks for your reply. I'd like to be able to do this for single files, but this is not possible. When you select a folder, the files inside are all copied. If you double-click on a file, then a context menu opens with 'Copy', 'Move' and 'Send To'. NOTE: As a example, using the Home directory, after selecting some files in My Computer, and then selecting a file in the Home directory (say 'Pictures' folder) and double-clicking on that file, the directory 'Pictures' will be copied to the Desktop. So, using your suggestion, I need to open a new Explorer.exe and have an option in the context menu. I think this is not possible, but maybe someone could advise me what it would look like (or any link or anything). I'd like to be able to do this for single files, but this is not possible.
